Azada: Ancient Magic: the Cave Puzzle is a new maze game in which you'll find and solve Primary culture of rat uterine smooth muscle cells is associated with high levels of M2 muscarinic acetylcholine receptor mRNA: a potential for an explanation of hormone-induced in vivo decidualization. Although known to be associated with inflammatory diseases, recent work has indicated that M2 muscarinic acetylcholine receptors (mAChRs) are also associated with non-inflammatory events. In particular, M2 mAChRs have been shown to be expressed on myometrial cells in the uterus of different species. In this study we have examined the possibility that M2 mAChRs may be associated with endometrial/decidual-like responses in the rat uterus. Real-time quantitative reverse transcription polymerase chain reaction (RT-PCR) was used to determine the expression level of mAChR subtype mRNAs in rat primary cultures of uterine smooth muscle cells (SMCs) under normoxic or hypoxic conditions. At 6 h, mAChR M2 mRNA levels were higher than the levels of M1 and M3 mAChR mRNA, which were similar. Both M2 and M3 mAChR mRNA levels increased between 6 and 24 h and were maintained thereafter. M2A and M3A, but not M2B and M3B, receptor mRNA levels increased further under hypoxic conditions. M2, M2A, M3A and M3B receptor mRNA levels were all reduced at 72 h. Although M1 receptor mRNA levels also increased between 6 and 24 h, these changes were transient, with no further increase under hypoxic conditions. Overall, these results suggest that there may be an association between SMC M2 mAChR mRNA levels and uterine endometrial/decidual-like changes.
